

Superintendent's Message – October 2018

Summer weather is lingering this October, providing warmer than average temperatures. Following the first few weeks of school, our teachers and students are deep into the first quarter of the school year. In classes where learning diagnostic assessments are collected, these results are being used instructionally. In all classes, instruction is progressing as teachers identify how students will be meeting learning targets and students are demonstrating mastery of their learning objectives.

School security is a focus for all our administrators. We have asked one of our staff with a strong background in emergency management to provide coordination across the district. As our Chief of School Security, David Lindenmuth is reviewing and updating our existing school security practices and supporting our team through updated training protocols. Each of our schools will be conducting safety and security training this fall.

One of the additions to our web page is a collection of tweets. I write these to inform the public of what is occurring in the school system. When I observe something noteworthy, I use Twitter to let our school community know about it. When possible, I capture a photo and attach it to make it more understandable. We hope that these brief messages help our school community see some of the more notable activities taking place in your school district.

Yours in education,

Jerry Wilson, PhD
